What have I done this week?

I have included my current backlog of items I'd like to complete, along with course outcomes that I plan to achieve by the end of this semester. I will adjust my weekly journal to include a glimpse of my backlog for each week.

This backlog only includes work that I have done or plan to do in CIT 380, starting with my group's second project and work I've done on my own personal project. This week, I have been able to complete all the JavaScript code required to help my group get a working product by June 3rd, 2022. This is a date that we set for as a goal for a working product. Here is a screenshot of the product as of now:

I got feedback from my group and told everyone that they are free to work on creating sentences they would like to see in our product. To go along with that, I also suggested that we create a backlog of things that have been done or that is to be done in an online spreadsheet, and that each week we should report on work that we have done for the week in an online document. Both are an effort to better identify our project type and to offer better reporting for work being worked on, which we have changed to a SAFe project.

What will I do this week?

This week I plan to do more work on my personal project by creating a webpage using React.js and then creating the locations page of my pickship app. I also plan to add more JavaScript functionality by adding an optional dropdown menu for selecting a specific season of Survivor that a random fact will come from.

What blockers did I have this week?

Though I feel that I am improving in my ability to plan for work that I plan to complete for the week, I still did not organize my time in a way that I could be successful in completing all the tasks I'd hoped to. Last week, I planned to create a webpage using React.js, but I failed in doing so because of my own mismanagement of time. To be fair with myself, I had some midterms I had to take, as well as two days of work, and family obligations that took my other free time.

While my own time management has been a blocker thus far, my own abilities to craft creative facts from Survivor is limited by a lack of data being supplied to me. Work has also been stunted on the project because we have two main contributors the project thus far, and the other members of the group often refuse to do work outside of the class.
