

June 25, 2022

What have I done this week?

This week I have been caught up getting assignments done in other classes as well as working every day. I did meet with Brother Godfrey and got some feedback regarding my plans for trying different management tools. Over the final weeks of the course, I will plan to try MSCW, time horizons, and will record more negatives in my journals. He also suggested that I try implementing some of Done is Done when it's Done to my management style for this project.

To go along with that, I also got feedback from Jaren, one of my past group members, regarding my etiquette in the group. He mentioned that I tend to get excited about parts of the project and rush to get them done instead of allowing others to do work on them. This is something I'm aware of and am attempting to improve.

What will I do next week?

Next week I will have a plan made for pickship and get it sent to my brother for review. He will let me know what other usability features I can add to the webapp. I will also begin working on building the locations, products, and picklist pages this next week. I plan to try MSCW and a time horizon next week as well

What didn't go well this week?

I tried to do a macro workbook to keep track of my progress through this project, but it did not go well, so I am going to stick with what I have. I also setup Asana and worked with it a couple of days. I did not like this tool for this project; however, I can see the usefulness in the larger projects and companies.

The biggest failure for this week was my time management. Usually, I handle stress and pressure well, but I broke this week. Next week will be good for me in recovering from my business throughout this week.